

Alec Brennan

Alec Brennan has a range of business and not-for-profit interests.

- He is Deputy Chancellor at Sydney University where he chairs the Finance and Building and Estates Committees
- He is a Director of the NSW Environment Protection Authority
- He is director of publicly listed Emeco Group having chaired the company for the past decade.
- He chairs a charity at Macquarie University that supports Motor Neurone Disease research and patient care

Alec Brennan started out life as a research scientist having trained as a food technologist at UNSW. He transitioned into management and has had a business career spanning the resource sector (production, marketing and mining services), the manufacturing sector covering food, chemicals and building products and the materials sector covering concrete, quarrying and cement.

Much of his career was spent with CSR Limited where he was CEO from 2003 to 2007. He also spent time as Finance Director and Director of Strategy. As Director of Strategy he led the work to separate Rinker Materials from CSR.

Outside work Alec has remained a closet scientist with interests in boating, travel and photography. He has a family foundation that supports the arts, education and the environment

Alec was awarded an AM in 2013 for "significant service to Business and Commerce, tertiary education administration and the Community"