

Peter Steinberg

Professor Peter Steinberg is the inaugural Director and CEO of the Sydney Institute of Marine Science, Professor of Biology and Director of the Centre for Marine Bio-Innovation at The University of New South Wales, and Visiting Professor at the Singapore Centre for Environmental Life Sciences Engineering at Nanyang Technological University in Singapore.

He received his PhD from the University of California in 1984, and has 30 years experience and some 170 international publications in a diversity of biological and ecological fields, and is an inventor on 9 patents. He has been a Fulbright Scholar, a Queen Elizabeth II Fellow, CEO of a publically listed biotechnology company and is on the editorial boards of leading scientific journals. His research interests include environmental change and coastal ecology; kelp and seaweed ecology; bacterial biofilm biology and ecology; biofouling and antifouling, and; environmental biotechnology.